Below is a section from Book 1: The Foundation that adds a little more to this basic Disclaimer.

SECTION II

PERSONAL AND PHYSICAL CONSIDERATIONS

IS THIS SOMETHING YOU REALLY WANT TO DO?

There are many decisions to make if you're considering becoming an escort. If you're already an escort but are feeling that this job might not be the one for you, please read on.

First Things First

First, are you under the age of eighteen? If you are, stop reading and take this book back to the bookstore and show your ID. Point to the part in the Disclaimer where it mentions this book isn't for anyone eighteen or under. If you bought it online, return it. If you can't, take it to a local used book store and get some store credit. I am serious. This information is not for you, regardless of how mature you think you are or how curious you are.

Do you have a drug or alcohol problem? Be honest. If you do, put down this book and take care of your problem(s). Only once you are certifiably clean and sober should you finish reading this series.

Do you have crippling emotional problems or intimacy issues with men? I would suggest you not pursue this career path, especially if your therapist advises against it (you are seeing a therapist, right?). Becoming an escort will not make your internal life any better than the state it's in already.

Are you a virgin and have some hare-brained idea about selling your virginity on the Net? I really don't think this is the wisest decision you will ever make, but it's your body.

Are you a virgin and want lots of sexual experience while making money? This isn't the way to go about it. Realize that the men you meet are not seeing you for you; they are seeing you for themselves. Go to a local bar or a small college and start making the rounds. Take a couple of years and have lots of (safer) sex to learn about men and sex, then turn professional, if you still want.

Are you old enough that you can drive, have held jobs, don't live with your parents, and have a credit history? Then you're old enough to read this book. Have you had sex with a few men, had a few boyfriends, maybe even been married? Good. You have some understanding of the male mind and know your way around the male body. Are you comfortable having sex outside a traditional, romantic relationship, possibly lots of sex with a number of different partners? Do you like sex? If the answer is yes to both questions, you're in good shape for becoming an escort.

Do you have previous experience in the adult industry? It's not important. Although many of the concepts overlap, actual experiences vary widely. The men I met stripping were very different from the men I met while escorting. Although my stripping experience paved the way and quickly made me comfortable as an escort, it was not necessary for becoming a good escort.

Do you feel you need to make cash right now? These books may not help you much. This is a business plan, and some of the things take time to implement, from a couple of weeks to a couple of months. If you're desperate for money, try a strip club while you make arrangements for becoming an escort.

Do you need to make money soon? Then this book will work for you, but only if you feel you can handle the other considerations that I'm going to discuss. Just needing money isn't a good enough reason to become an escort. This will impact your life. Don't make a hasty decision.

Do you want adventure, glamour, or to do something "wild?" Becoming an escort can give you all that, but they're poor reasons for starting this work. This is a business, not a tourist experience or a Girls Gone Wild video. If you treat it as anything less than a business, expect to have problems. This job can give you lots of money, fun, and memorable experiences, but it does affect you, your life, and everyone you know. Don't make a hasty decision.
